National Security Decision Memorandum 11

TO: The Secretary of State
 The Secretary of Defense
 The Secretary of the Treasury
 The Director of Central Intelligence
 The Administrator of the Agency for International Development
 The Director of the U. S. Information
 Agency

SUBJECT: Peru

The President's recent decision to defer application of the Hickenlooper Amendment with respect to Peru was based inter alia on the premise that this action would provide additional time to:

1. Prepare our political position in the hemisphere for a confrontation with Peru, if that becomes necessary, and
2. Maximize pressures on Peru to induce the Peruvians to agree to a satisfactory settlement of the IPC issue.

In preparing our political position, the President wishes to maintain a restrained, reasonable, and conciliatory public posture while the United States works carefully with friendly governments in an effort to assure that they will not support Peru in a future confrontation.

In maintaining maximum pressure, the United States should try to influence the decisions of both public and private sector entities to the extent possible. However, the President wishes to avoid overt actions which the Peruvian Government can exploit as acts of bad faith or economic aggression, and which Peru might use as an excuse to:
